

Coming soon...a new classroom resource developed by the OSSTF/FEESO Common Threads initiative

Water is fast becoming one of the main environmental and social priorities of the 21st century. Access to this precious resource is a growing concern for developing countries and also here in Canada. Recent events on Canada's First Nation reserves show that water as a natural resource should not be taken for granted.

Working with the Confederation of Educational Workers of Bolivia, the third Common Threads project sent a team of volunteer members to Bolivia to conduct research resulting in the creation of curriculum on water and privatization.

In addition to the rare case study in the privatization of water in Bolivia, and its subsequent reversal, the team has addressed related issues such as equal access to clean water and sanitation, pollution and climate change and Canada's role in protecting this critical resource.
